Application

Due to considerable applications and recruitment demands, Big Four have launched annual recruitment, which enables candidates to make their application anytime. When you are applying for Big Four, CV and Cover letter would not be important. The application system of big four collects your personal information. Our coaching will focus on information filling and questions answering, which definitely will outstand you from other candidates.

Online Test

Depending on the programme you've applied to, you'll be asked to complete Situational Judgement Test, Numerical Test, Inductive Test (sometimes called logical reasoning) and Verbal Reasoning Test. You'll sit the tests again at the assessment day on paper and under supervision so doing them online is good preparation. Following the completion of your mock and actual assessments, you'll be provided with personal feedback reports detailing how you've performed.

First Interview

It will be a one-to-one interview which provides you with the opportunity to display the qualities that paper can't do justice to. Company is looking for you to provide them with evidence of the skills they are seeking as well as reassuring that you've thought carefully about your career choice. You need to be able to demonstrate that you have a clear interest in the business world and the company. Depending on the programme you've applied to, you'll either have a telephone interview or an interview with a manager at your chosen office.

Assessment centre

It usually consists of tests that measure your numerical and inductive (sometimes called logical reasoning) or verbal reasoning skills; a written communication exercise and a group or individual exercise. This may sound a lot, but don't worry - the centre is designed to be as interesting and enjoyable as possible, giving you the chance to demonstrate your best qualities and find out as much about life in this market as you can.

Second Interview

It is a one-to-one interview with a partner or a director of the business area you want to join. This is an opportunity for you to demonstrate your passion and enthusiasm for the business and your understanding of the importance of client service.
